THE DRAMA

THEATRICAL BAEDEKER

ACADEMY OF MUSIC—"Cabiria," moving-picture drama, by Gabrielle D'Annunzio, of the third century B. C. A truly marvelous feat on the reel, with a convincing volcanic eruption.

ADELPHI—"The Revolt," by Edward Locke, starring Helen Ware. Driven desperate, a neglected wife seeks the gaiety enjoyed as a prerogative by her husband, but comes home ere 'tis too late.

BROAD—"Lady Windermere's Fan." Revival of Oscar Wilde's satire by Margaret Anglin. Review below.

CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE—"Pilate's Daughter," miracle play, by Francis L. Kennel. Review below.

GARRICK—"Nearly Married," farce comedy, by Edgar Selwyn, starring Bruce McRae. Review below.

WALNUT—"Bringing Up Father," musical comedy, based on George McManus' cartoons, by Gus Hill.

Margaret Anglin in Notable Revival
Margaret Anglin is one of the really comparatively few great living actresses. One speaks of "great living actresses"—the majority of great actresses, of course, being dead. The same is inevitably true of great, very great, playwrights.

However, Miss Anglin is very much alive—so much so that her husband figures in automobile arrests while she, herself, revives a play written by one of the most brilliant men of the century—a man to whom, lying in a grave in Montmartre, has come a full and deserved recognition for surpassing wit and genius.

"Lady Windermere's Fan," in which Miss Anglin appeared last night at the Broad Street Theatre, is a play of admirable technique, an evening's dramatic menu in which every course is served with tartar sauce. There has never been a more seductive, a more subtle, a more delightfully worldly Mrs. Elynne than the one presented by Miss Anglin. Miss Anglin makes that brilliant woman, of a dubious character, really winning. On the stage this type usually isn't. In Wilde's play this woman, tragical in her life, becomes a mother desirous of protecting her child. Mrs. Elynne is perhaps the most appealing character in the Wilde plays.

As such, Miss Anglin played the part with an intellectual understanding, an artistic restraint which Wilde himself would have admired.

If "Lady Windermere's Fan" is already an anachronism so far as upper Fifth avenue or Rittenhouse Square are concerned, its satire on social and home frailty is quite as appropos as when Wilde wrote it. As a play it is far superior to the Eugene Walter and "Gus Thomas" productions as they attempt to deal, seriously or otherwise, with social and other problems.

Miss Anglin's cast is admirable. Ruth Holt Boucicault is a scintillant Duchess of Berwick. Florence Carpenter, as Lady Windermere, was insinuatingly captivating. While Sidney Greenstreet played Lord Lorton incomparably, there have been much better Lord Windermere than that enacted by Leonard Willey, the heralded Australian star. Mr. Willey was a bit too intense—too intense, you know. Altogether, Miss Anglin's revival is notable. It is perhaps one of the best, if not the best, presentation of Oscar Wilde's delectable play.

A Striking Miracle Play

"Pilate's Daughter," the miracle play by Francis L. Kennel, a Roman Catholic priest, was produced last night at the Chestnut Street Opera House. One of the unique features of the production is that there are no male characters in it.

Apart from the spectacular aspects of the play, it has a strong religious appeal—the appeal of such plays as "Ben Hur" and "The Sign of the Cross." "Pilate's Daughter" is founded on the old legend relating to the daughter of Pontius Pilate. According to this, Claudia, the daughter of the proconsul, threw a rose from her balcony as Christ was being led to Calvary. The flower touched his garment, and although it was trod upon by hundreds when the girl recovered it, the rose still bloomed.

Ten years later the perpetually blooming rose was used to work miracles. A spring is made to gush out of the stone prison wall where the Christian women are held; a dead child is brought to life; reason is restored to an unfortunate woman stricken mad at the time of the crucifixion.

Violet de Bicarrri takes the part of Claudia, Pilate's daughter, in the first act, and the role of later years, when the girl has grown to womanhood, is assumed by Constance Molinaux, who displayed consummate skill. Miss Molinaux's work at all times bore the stamp of sincerity, especially in her eloquently delivered prayers.

Marion Barney, an old friend of Philadelphia playgoers, was welcomed back in dual roles, first as Claudia Procula, the wife of Pontius Pilate, later as Agrippina, the wife of Caesar. Although neither part was of a nature to bring out her accomplishments to the best, she acquitted herself admirably. Margaret Vryling, as the Roman sorceress, made the most of the situations that fell to her. In fact, all the members of the exceptionally large cast were excellent.

Considerable attention has been given to the scenery and properties. Some of the spectacular effects achieved are remarkable. A curious and striking lapse is made, however, in the handling of the Crucifixion in the second scene of act I, when the Christ is shown without the thieves that, according to Biblical history, were crucified on either side of the Saviour.

Valeska Surratt at Keith's

Valeska Surratt, who replaced Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle at Keith's yesterday, is notable — for her gown principally. Miss Surratt's gowns are wonderful. They are worth buying a seat to see. They are the sort you cannot ordinarily behold in shop windows. There's a personality about them. The personality may be bizarre—but then there are things one wants to see at least once in a lifetime.

Miss Surratt, it must be said, is an extraordinary dancer. She possesses a sense of rhythm which places her almost in the class of musicians. There is something musical, even in her most vigorous cavortings. She is decidedly interesting. One would not call her an actress, and her voice is one of the most unappealing ever heard on the stage. But her personality is distinct, anything but nebulous, and her scenic settings are always striking.

Miss Surratt appears in "Black Crepe and Diamonds," a modernized symbolic act reminiscent of "Everywoman." The Castles were obliged to cancel their engagement because of the illness of Mrs. Castle. The Castles are, perhaps, the most famed, as well as most popular dancers in America. If the truth be told, young Jack Mann, who turkey-trotts in Miss Surratt's act, is as notable a dancer in his way as Vernon Castle. He is not quite so dignified, to be sure, but he is more agile, even more graceful. His debut—if it be a debut—is notable. For he is one of the best dancers that has ever appeared on the stage.

The contrasts of vaudeville are as striking as they are amazing. Miss Jane Connelly and company appeared in an act—except "a comedy of modern life"—which was successful only in boring one. It is a high-water mark of banality and bathos, and a type of the sort of thing which makes one wonder at the temporary mental comas of vaudeville managers. On the other hand, the rest of the Keith bill can only arouse admiration for the intelligent selection. It is hugely entertaining. Mae Melville is as delightfully funny as ever. Paul Pereira, the court violinist of Portugal, gives testimony to the taste of dethroned kings. He is a musician of rare ability, and Nevins' "Rosary" was never played with more feeling, restrained passionate pathos, than it is by Pereira. Edwin George—listed as an "almost juggler"—juggles as entertainingly with light talk as with tin plates and rubber balls. He is genuinely diverting.

"Nearly Married" at the Garrick

Governor Tener, of the sovereign State of Pennsylvania, aided and abetted an elopement last night. This in itself was reprehensible enough, but his full iniquity will be understood when it is announced that the elopement was between a man and his own wife. Just what excuse the president of the National League will make remains to be seen. But aside from this official faux pas, "Nearly Married," which came back to the Garrick last night with a cast new, with the exception of the star, Bruce McRae, proved a pleasant entertainment.

The main criticism of the play, which has been reviewed before, is its exceeding silliness. If brevity be the soul of wit, then "Nearly Married" is the witless play of the ages, for it lasted just one hour and 27 minutes. It began at half-past 8 and finished at half-past 10, with two 15-minute intermissions.

Bruce McRae, who is a living duplicate in looks and manners and speech of Archie Gunn, the artist, was a bit heavy in the role of the bedeviled husband, Hattie King, the professional correspondent, was fairly true to life, though a bit hard. Gertrude Robinson and John McCabe, as the other wedded couple, did well, as did Dick Giffen as the obnoxious brother. Smaller parts were played, and played well, by Delmar E. Clark as the East Indian, Beatrice Ingram as his Irish wife, John Sparks as the justice of peace, and Danny Day as the chauffeur.

Antoinette Walker was Betty Lindsay, the foolish heroine.

Taken all in all, "Nearly Married" is a merry comedy, broad at times, but entertaining nevertheless, but too brief, save for the inexcusably long intermissions.

Cartoon Pictures in a Play

Thousands of persons have laughed at George McManus' "Bringing Up Father" cartoons. The experiment of taking such burlesque drawings and making them into a musical comedy is interesting. In the case of the musical farce comedy which opened last night at the Walnut the feat has been accomplished successfully. The comedy is indeed as laughable as the popular pictures.

"Father," very tough, initiated into society by "mother"; a bogus count trying to get "father" to invest in a radium mine, and Tom Hamilton, "father's" business partner, are among the inimitably funny characters that go to make the play one prolonged side-splitting evening's amusement.

While there is little plot to the comedy, it is replete with jokes and good songs. Of these a number made decided hits—"Dear Old Girl," "Just a Little Smile," "Love, Love, Love," "A Bandit Raffles," and last, but not least, "The Irish Suffragette."

John E. Cain as Jiggs Mahoney (father), and Miss Lydia Kane as Mrs. Jiggs (mother), were adequately and grotesquely humorous, and equally good were Robert G. Rice as the butler, Grace M. Hansen and Blanche Newcombe as the daughters, Tom Meade, Harry A. Trunk, Leo Frankel, Dave Conroy and Madeline Grey.

The Empire

"Jah, I vos a German, but I thank Himmel I'm not there," said Harry Bentley, who, as Rudolph Sauer, furnished most of the comedy in the rollicking burlesque, "The Love Club," which opened a week's engagement at the Empire yesterday. As presented by the Rosey Posey Girls the piece was an unqualified success.

In addition to the comedy, good singing and splendid dancing were also provided.

AMUSEMENTS

OF FEMININE BEAUTY

"People talk of beauty of mind, and develop the intellect by hard study, but when the spirit is spoken of they smile and speak of religious attitudes," declared Edith Campbell Walker, who plays the part of the professional correspondent in "Nearly Married." "Now, to be beautiful a woman must develop the spiritual side of her nature. By spirituality I do mean a highly developed mentality, the freedom of mind given by the civilized forms of education, but the developed soul of an individual raised high above the mind and that smiles from the eyes and expresses kindness and beautiful thinking in every thought, word and gesture.

"This spirituality can be applied to the most trivial things of life. Simplicity is its keynote, and therefore the beautiful girl is the natural girl. Now, this natural girl does not rely upon the cold cream for her beautiful complexion. She never maintains that water ruins the skin and insists upon enlarging her pores with every unnecessary application of cold cream. She keeps her mind bright and radiant first.

"The dangerously beautiful woman is feminine. By that I don't mean effeminate; I don't
